When Chapleau Skirted Disaster in the Summer of 1948

This is the type of smoke-choked scene that pilots would have encountered when flying near the fire. Photograph courtesy of Thessalon Public Library, "The Mississagi Fire 1948 Historical Account."

By Mike Commito
This upcoming summer marks the sixty-fifth anniversary of the largest forest fire in Ontario's history: the Mississagi. However, due to the fact that the conflagration only claimed the life of one valiant firefighter, it has not received the type of coverage or historical attention as Ontario's other killer blazes. This includes the Porcupine of 1911, which killed seventy-three people, destroyed an estimated $3 million worth of property and burned approximately 500,000 acres. Worse still was Matheson in 1916 which killed 224 people, making it the deadliest fire ever in Canadian history. Furthermore, the last "killer" forest fire struck Haileybury in 1922, rendering 6,366 people homeless, scorching 414,720 acres of woodlands, and killing forty-three. However, for students of history in Chapleau, the Mississagi may hold more importance as the fire came very close to razing it to the ground. Moreover, in the aftermath fire, Chapleau benefited greatly from the government organized salvage project, "Operation Scorch," which enhanced the town by increasing connectivity with the rest of northern Ontario through the construction of a major road.

The source of ignition came on May 25th 1948. Fires began and rapidly spread in both the Mississagi River Valley and the Chapleau areas. Beginning as two separate fires, they were quickly referred to simply as one entity once the two conflagrations joined later that summer: the Mississagi. Both blazes were the byproducts of human error – a poacher's negligence and a construction accident.

As the fire's intensity increased, it had already consumed approximately 500,000 acres by mid-June, settlements near and far began feeling its devastating effects. In white River, to the fire's west in the neighbouring Algoma district, it was reported that cottagers being evacuated had to use flashlights in broad daylight because of the thick plumes of smoke. At the fire's apex, the United States Weather Bureau had reported that it was the cause of a gigantic smoke cloud travelling south. According to the North Bay Nugget, "the air over Washington [DC] appeared to be filled with haze ranging from light to dark gray and the early sun was ringed with a bright red halo."

With the blaze still unchecked, many officials started to fear that some of the region's settlements, namely Chapleau, were in jeopardy. This forced the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests (DLF) to take drastic steps to protect human life. By June 12th, the provincial government had begun taking precautionary measures in case it had to evacuate the town and its 2,800 inhabitants. The last time such an emergency evacuation had been necessary was in 1916 during the Matheson fire, which claimed 224 lives; those old enough to remember the carnage feared the worst. Boxcars were stationed at the Chapleau railway station and a skeleton firefighting crew was assembled as a last ditch effort in case the flames threatened to overrun the town. Its mayor, Bert W. Zufelt, had ordered that fire hoses be laid out near all the fire hydrants should they be needed in the eleventh hour. Chapleau's residents desperately needed rain because without it the town appeared destined to succumb to the encroaching flames. Over the course of the June 12-13th weekend, winds converged on the areas and facilitated the fire's 75,000 expansion, increasing the likelihood of an emergency evacuation.

Fortunately, just as it appeared the fire would overrun the town, the flames were checked two to three miles short of Chapleau. Residents collectively breathed a sigh of relief but the danger had not fully passed; the fire was still raging out of control.

The tide finally began turning on the morning of June 22nd, as rain showered the burning area, dousing it intermittently for the next ten days. This development was crucial to snuffing out the fire, for both the Mississagi and Chapleau regions; this was the first recorded rainfall in over a month. The downpour in both areas proved to be the decisive factor in the suppression campaign as the fire's intensity and expansion were significantly checked. Firefighting efforts continued until July 21st, largely against sporadic smudge fires, until the DLF classified the situation as under control. By August 1st 1948, all firefighting crews had been withdrawn and the Mississagi fire was extinguished.

Movie Clears Final Hurdle

Indie feature film, The Road to Tophet, shot locally last spring, now heads into Post Production after having run a successful campaign to raise funds. A surge of support especially from the community ensured that the money necessary for completion of the film were secured. Among many others, a generous donation from Collins Home Hardware was received. The producers wish to thank everyone who supported the film's campaign.

The show will shortly begin the final process of sound edit and mix, colour correction and scoring. Once the movie is complete it will head out onto the film festival circuit.

Letters to the Editor

I am a student at Chapleau Elementary and Secondary School, I'm happy that my school will be hosting its 5th annual Pow Wow on May 6th, 2013. I have attended many Pow Wows in the past. When a Pow Wow takes place, you have dancers, drummers, and Elders who all play a important role in making the day a special event.

What I enjoy most about going to the Elementary and Secondary School Pow Wow is having fun with family, friends and Elders. I enjoy being able to share my cultural experiences with my school friends. We get a chance to sit, talk and enjoy the sound of drumming while eating some delicious food, especially the scone dogs.

Last year was special for myself and my family because my little brother was given the opportunity to be a flag carrier for the Chapleau Cree First Nation and afterwards we all danced together.

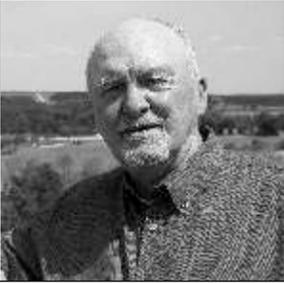

Hope to see everyone on May 6th from 10:45 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. to have fun, laugh and have some good times.

Tony Fraser, Grant Campbell, Anicet Lafreniere work to resolve Chapleau water crisis when diesel system fails in 1973

Chapleau Moments

by Michael J. Morris

When a major water crisis faced Chapleau in February 1973, Tony Fraser, Grant Campbell and Anicet Lafreniere, who were not employees of the municipality, worked tirelessly to restore full service.

It all started on Wednesday February 14, Valentine's Day when pump house attendants noted that the pumping pressure had dropped at the old pump house, which was diagnosed as caused by a break in a water main somewhere in the community. It was not known where as water had not surfaced above ground.

The electric pumping station was turned off as it could only supply 550,000 gallons pressure daily, which was sufficient to keep Chapleau well supplied but with the break, it could not cope with the situation.

Immediately, the auxiliary diesel system that could supply quite adequately the needs of the town plus the water main break was put into action, and this worked quite well for two days when the 27-year old diesel system sputtered and died.

Tony, Grant and Anicet, described as "diesel experts" in the Chapleau Sentinel were brought in to determine the problem.

They worked non-stop for about 24 hours until they found what they thought was the problem.

Parts for the obsolete diesel were found in Toronto and at this point the Ontario Provincial Police were contacted to assist. Sgt. Ron Young contacted Insp. C.G. Wilkinson in Sudbury and relay of OPP cruisers was set up to bring the parts to Chapleau. Sgt. Young sent a Chapleau cruiser to Sudbury for the final leg of the journey.

Despite working non-stop, by Monday morning it still would not work so Reeve Terry Way-White called an emergency meeting of township council for 6:30 a.m. at the pump house. The full council of Councillors Dr. G.E. Young, F.A. 'Nick' Card, Ernie Gilbert and me were present.

Council declared a state of emergency and schools were closed while large users of water and residential water users were asked to ration their use.

Bob Smith of Dominion Road Machinery in North Bay was contacted and he immediately travelled to Chapleau to help resolve the problem. Twenty-four hours later it was determined that the injection system would have to be replaced, and Mr. Smith was able to find one in Toronto.

This time, George Elliott, Chief Forester of the Ministry of Natural Resources at Chapleau provided assistance by placing a

Grant Campbell (right), Ken Stone, Anicet Lafreniere

Twin Otter aircraft at the municipality's disposal to rush the new injector from Toronto, and it arrived early Tuesday afternoon.

"At exactly one minute before midnight Tuesday (February 20), the diesel system was returned to duty and is now supplying the town with its normal pressure," the Sentinel reported.

And the break that started it all? After it was found, it was repaired and water thawing at homes affected was underway, although some with plastic pipes had to wait as they could not be thawed electrically.

Although all's well that ends well, there was considerable discussion at township council when meeting when Councillor Gilbert complained that as chairman of the public works committee he felt he should have been informed about the crisis when it first started rather than hearing about it on the street.

Councillor Card, who was a CPR engineer at the time, said he was told about it in Cartier, while Councillor Young and I agreed there should have been better communication with council.

The destruction caused by the Mississagi fire was extensive. It claimed the life of one firefighter, as mentioned, and had scorched an unprecedented amount of land: 747, 520 acres. Of this total, fifty-four townships had been affected and the DLF estimated that seventy-five percent of the burn had occurred in mature forest types. Forester Gord Campbell calculated that the fire had destroyed 205,432,560 foot board measure (fbm) of coniferous timber –white, red, and jack pine. The damage to deciduous trees –white and yellow birch, poplar, and maple –was considerably less, amounting to 316,481 cords. Lastly, the fire also destroyed the equivalent of 3,134,020 railroad ties in jack pine logs and 407,423 posts of cedar. In addition to the loss of valuable timber, the out of pocket for suppressing the fire to the Department was over $500,000.

Unlike previous forest fires in the province, this one led to unprecedented action from the DLF in the form of a massive salvage operation. To carry out the huge project, the government enlisted the services of some of the province's smaller and more inexperienced companies. While the operation had its share of hurdles and was occasionally marred by episodes of unprofessionalism it would go on to produce some noteworthy achievements. In terms of its lumber production, the DLF, through its contractors, was able to salvage 300,000,000 fbm of fire-damaged timber. In addition, in order to access much of the salvageable timber, the contractors and the Crown had to construct over 540 miles of all-weather and logging roads. They added to Ontario's rapidly expanding transportation network, and facilitated the penetration into parts of the province that had been previously inaccessible and remote.

In particular, Chapleau greatly benefited from this process. The salvage facilitated the completion of a road, now Highway 129, which linked the town to the rest of northern Ontario and Highway 17. Back in 1929, the provincial government had announced that it would begin building this road. According to local author Vincent Crichton, the construction process was extremely slow; it took twenty-one years to build merely sixty miles of ordinary dirt road. Nevertheless, it was officially christened on January 28th 1949 when T.J. Godfrey drove the first car on the completed road. Had it not been for the fire, the road would not have been completed by this date as the massive salvage operation pushed it to completion.

In the end, Chapleau was spared destruction from Ontario's largest forest fire and an emergency exodus was not required.

Inadvertently, the town benefitted from the infrastructural projects in the wake of the fire and in this sense the blaze did more good than harm to the community. Nevertheless, it is important to remember that in June 1948 Chapleau came dangerously close to being consumed by the Mississagi. Thankfully that did not happen and the 65th anniversary this year is a time for reflection and not memorial.

Mike Commito studied the Mississagi fire for his Masters at Laurentian University. He is currently a PhD candidate at McMaster University where his research focuses on the history of black bear hunting and management in Ontario. If you have any stories about spring bear hunting or the anti-spring bear hunt campaign in the mid-1990s that you would like to share with him he can be reached at commitma@mcmaster.ca or 705-522-5812.

Man Fined For Allowing Pelts To Spoil

A Manitowadge man has been fined a total of $450 for three offences of allowing furbearer pelts to spoil.

Philip Barbeau pleaded guilty and was fined $150 on each count after he allowed the pelts of three pine marten to spoil.

The court heard that in January of 2012, Barbeau set traps for pine marten in the area of the Fry's Road, north of Manitowadge. Barbeau was unable to return to check the traps himself, and did not make any effort to have the traps checked or removed. On October 27, 2012, a Ministry of Natural Resources conservation officer discovered the decomposed carcasses of three pine marten after inspecting several traps along Fry's Road. Barbeau was contacted the following day while resetting traps in the same area and admitted to allowing the pine marten to spoil.

Justice of the Peace Liette Hunter heard the case in the Ontario Court of Justice, Marathon, on April 16, 2013.

Trappers are reminded that it is an offence to allow the pelts of furbearing mammals to spoil.

To report a natural resources violation, call 1-877-TIPS-MNR (847-7667) toll-free any time or contact your local ministry office during regular business hours. You can also call Crime Stoppers anonymously at 1-800-222-TIPS (8477).
